Description of the incident, including the suspected cause of death, injury or egregious abuse or neglect:
On May 4th, the agency received a report regarding an infant who had been pronounced dead at her home. The mother had found the infant unresponsive and called 911. The paramedics attempted CPR upon arrival, but were unsuccessful and the child was pronounced dead. The mother reported that her apartment had a roach infestation, so she had the infant sleep with her rather than in her pack-n-play to protect her from exposure. The police report indicates the infant fell from the bed and landed on the exposed metal of the baseboard heater and bed frame. The leg of the metal bed frame had pierced the plastic coating of an extension cord, which was plugged in and ran under the bed. Contact between the metal bed frame and heater created a circuit which electrocuted the child and caused her death. The mother had purchased the cord in December 2011 and had no reason to believe it was faulty or defective. The medical examiner ruled the infant's death a result of accidental electrocution. The mother's 6-year-old daughter, 5-year-old son, and 2-year-old daughter were found to be free from injury and well cared for. No criminal charges were filed in this case.

Findings by agency, including maltreatment determination and material circumstances leading to incident:
The agency screened in and assessed the allegation of neglect by the mother to her infant daughter. The agency unsubstantiated the allegation of neglect, as there was no indication that the infant's death was due to the mother's negligence. The medical examiner ruled the infant died as a result of accidental electrocution. The mother had no reason to believe the extension cord was defective and was trying to protect her infant from a roach infestation by co-sleeping. The agency also unsubstantiated neglect by the mother to the other children. The mother had made numerous attempts to have the building management address the bug problem which was occurring throughout the building and not just in the mother's apartment. The children were determined to be unsafe due to the housing issues and mother's struggle to manage the children's behaviors. An In-Home Safety Plan was developed and the family was referred to Intensive In-Home Services to assist the mother in identifying appropriate housing and improve her parenting skills, which the family continues to receive.
